How to Use This Book

Use the vocabulary list as a practical reference. Learn a small group at a time, say each word aloud, and create your own sentence before moving on.

- Learn: Read the word, meaning, and example together.
- Say: Pronounce the word slowly, then at normal speaking speed.
- Use: Make a new sentence connected to your own daily English.
- Review: Return to older words regularly instead of memorizing all 150 at once.
- Practice: Complete the sentence exercise near the end and check the answers.

The goal is accurate, natural vocabulary. A difficult word is useful when it expresses your meaning more precisely.

How to Learn Difficult Vocabulary

Learning 150 words at once is not the most effective approach. Build vocabulary gradually and use new words repeatedly.

1. Learn Words in Context

Do not memorize only a dictionary definition. Learn the word with a sentence such as "I was reluctant to change my plans."

2. Say Difficult Words Aloud

Read the word slowly, break it into syllables, listen to its pronunciation, say it several times, and use it in your own sentence.

3. Learn a Few Words Each Day

A practical routine is five new words, a review of yesterday's words, one sentence for each word, and spoken practice.

4. Connect Words With Situations

Attach a word to something you already understand: awkward to an uncomfortable conversation, tedious to repetitive paperwork, spontaneous to an unplanned trip.

5. Review Difficult Words Regularly

Review on the same day, next day, three days later, one week later, and two weeks later.
